Brake Light SOS Rescues Motorist

A woman who noticed an S O S signal flashing on the brake lights of a car is being credited by police with the rescue Sunday of a Canadian who was abducted at gunpoint

George Edmund Shannon, 38, of Vancouver was abducted after he picked up a 17-year-old boy at Weed, Calif., police said. Shannon told police he asked the boy to leave the car in Eugene, Ore., but the youth produced a sawed-off shotgun and ordered him to drive to Portland.

After taking his billfold from Shannon, the youth ordered him to drive to Astoria, Ore., police said.

Gail Beveridge of Warren. Ore., was driving northwest of Portland when she attempted to pass a car. As she passed

A 17-year-old boy from Dorris, Calif., who was riding in the car was taken into cus-tody and lodged in a juvenile detention home in St. Helens. His name was not released.

Police said they found a sawed-off shotgun on the pas-

A Night of Terror On Part-Time Job

The 21-year-old Lakehead University student had taken a part-time job at the district jail two weeks earlier to pay for his education.

trustees undoubtedly are sincere in their determined efforts to clamp a tight lid on school spending next year. However, the steps they have taken so far show them also to be unrealistic. The board has passed a resolution limiting the total amount of its operating budget for 1977 to $42 milfron - almost exactly the same amount that was budgetted for 1976. This is not really a no-growth budget, as it appears, because the board has already found it will underspend this year's budget by about $2 million. Still, the rate of growth is exceedingly small, certainly under five per cent.

No matter how well the federal government's anti-inflation program works, it is unlikely to bring the inflation rate for 1977 down to less than five per cent. More than threequarters of the school board's budget goes in salaries, for one thing, and the salary increases for both teachers closer to eight. Given current inflation rates, the cost of materials and supplies probably will also rise by eight or even 10 per cent. The school board points to a steady decline in the number of students as a factor that will allow it to keep its budget growth lower than the inflation rate. But a decline in student numbers does not lead automatically to a corresponding decline in costs.

What happens is that there is a dozen fewer students here, another 15 gone over there, hardly anywhere sibilities. enough to justify closing down a class room or reducing the teaching staff. The Greater Victoria school and non-teaching staff will surely be taken. The board may at some time in at least six per cent, and probably 1977 realize it cannot meet the $42 million figure, abandon it, and engage in whatever financial contortions it can to keep the budget balanced. Alternatively, it may grimly stick to that figure, no matter what the damage to the educational system. That would be the real tragedy: overcrowded class rooms, fired staff and forgotten programs, all for the sake of a single mill or less on the tax bill. # China's Day of Purge

PEKING — On Thursday, Oct. 7, with the backing of the 8341 Unit of the People's Liberation Army, plainclothes security men moved on the residences of China's four leading radicals in the Chungnanhai leadership compound in the heart of Pek-climactic moment in the current purge of radicals but that is how it is being reconstructed by some of the more reliable and better informed diplomats in

With the benefit of hindsight, in fact, with the benefit of hindsight, in fact, one can also patch together a chronology of the developments leading up to that crucial moment when Mao's widow Chiang Ching, Wang Hung-wen, Chang Chun-chiao and Yao Wen-yuan were purged. The chronology is preliminary, tentative and speculative but it meshes with the publicly established facts.

There is no doubt that least Thursday.

There is no doubt that last Thursday was the day of the purge. That morning, the two official newspapers foreigners are allowed to see each carried a different article under the byline Liang Hsiao, a pseudonym long used by the radicals. The next day, these same newspapers were full of non-controversial "fillers" which had the appearance of being written some tin previously and could have been inserted by newly-installed editors. And it was Thursday, Oct. 7, that marked the last appearance of an alleged final quotation from Chairman Mao — a quotation which will almost surely be held up as a fraudulent concoction of the radicals.

The struggle over who would lead China after the death of Chairman Mao had been under way since the beginning of the Cultural Revolution in 1966. But the current phase of the struggle, with Hua Kuoat its centre, can be marked from April of this year.

Shanghai Mafia

Analysts tend to believe that Hua's appointment on April 7 as premier and first vice-chairman of the Communist party was part of a political deal hurriedly put together in the wake of the Tien An Men riot'two days before and the dismissal of vice-premier Teng Hsiao-ping.

The deal was that Mr. Hua would leader of the Communist party once Chairman Mao died and the premiership would then be given to Chang Chunchiao, widely considered to be the most capable member of the radical "Shanghai Mafia." Mr. Hua was a moderate who could accommodate himself to some of the radicals' positions. Mr. Chang was a radical who was seen as possessing a pragmatic style and capacity

The deal was doomed but it neatly reflected the power standoff at that time. The moderates had broad support in the army and the bureaucracy. The radicals exerted tremendous sway — illusory and shallow it now seems — over public opinion because they could claim the backing of Mao Tse-tung and because they had kept control of the official media.

The standoff also was reflected in the contradictory political situation which prevailed through the spring and summer. The official media intermittently called for struggle against "capitalist roads" in the party but also urged unity every time it appeared that such a struggle might actually break out

Then on July 28, when Chairman Mao was clearly dying and had only seven weeks left to live, a devastating earthquake destroyed the city of Tangshan and inflicted serious damage in Tientsin and Peking.

A lot of hard decisions had to be made, and made quickly. It was Hua's chance to establish himself as the man in charge and he took advantage of it. The official media tried to play down his role but they could only partly succeed when he left the radicals behind and went off to Tangshan a few days after the quake to put his stamp on the relief operations.

seemed like a campaign speech, Hua identified himself with the first successes achieved in restoring Tangshan. His pragmatic message was, we can deliver. He tied himself to the army and gave it much of the credit for the relief operation.

Signs of a building conflict were evident on the day Chairman Mao died. The ouncement of Mao's death was a patchwork document which included every major radical and moderate slogan and concept of the preceding several months.

The announcement, like the media coverage of the mourning period, left the impression that all the top leaders were willing to compromise, at least in the short run, in the interests of continuity, unity and stability. But we can see in retrospect that what the announcement actually demonstrated, in its lack of direction, was that nothing had been resolved and the leadership deal was inherently un-

The next 10 days provided more evidence of growing tension. The first television coverage of the lying in state had an off-camera announcer reading out the name of Madame Mao with a theatrical tone of-grief in his voice. This was soon excised and Madame Mao's role was played down during the rest of the ourning period. Newspapers and television also played down, as much as they could, Hua's role at the memorial rally By picturing him alongside other leaders rather than alone, they strongly suggested that a collective leadership was in the off-ing. This was the radicals' way of drawing attention to the deal in April whereby Hua would share power in post-Mao China with Chang Chun-chiao acting as premier. In the days following the memorial rally on Sept. 18, it became evident that the moderates and radicals in general and Hua and Chang in particular were either unable or unwilling to work together. The inability of the leadership to announce immediately after the memorial rally what was to become of Mao's body was a clear indication of divisiveness.

Then a couple of days later, there was an abrupt change of signals on the mourning period. The radicals or the moderates more probably the radicals, called for an purposes. The radicals in particular may have wanted to lengthen the mourning period as part or an attempt to stall for time while they engaged in political

For more than a week after the rally, the political tilt of the media was ambiguous — there was neither a decidedly radical nor a decidedly moderate tone. But then, on Sept. 29, an astoundingly emoonal article written by two key radicals despicable. The two authors said that while these unnamed capitalist roaders snarled and bared their claws like wolves. they were fundamentally weak and would lose in any struggle. The appearance of the article demonstrated that the media were still controlled by the radicals.

About this time, there were persistent reports that posters had gone up at Tsinghua University attacking Hua. It was at Tsinghua University where the first posters attacking former vice-premier Teng Hsiao-ping appeared early this year heralding his downfall.

I spent days trying to confirm the existence of the posters. It turned out to be a fruitless effort but subsequent events suggest that the posters were indeed put up. In other words, the article by the Tsinghua officials combined with the probably existence of the posters meant that the radicals were in the process of launching an all-out attack on the moderates.

The next day, on the eve of China's National Day, the moderates and radicals were still capable for showing a united front as they all appeared for a meeting commemorating the anniversary of the founding of the People's Republic. The meeting would turn out to mark the last appearance of the four radicals now believed to be under arrest.

For another week, however, the radical media campaign continued. On National Day, the People's Daily ran an editorial which paid only lip service to unity and called on the people to fight against the bourgeoisie in the party. Three days later, there was another strongly radical piece in the Guangming Daily

Fraudulent Writings

What will probably always remain a mystery is whether the radical attack was defensive or offensive in nature. Were the the radicals move because they discovered that the moderates had decided to move against them and push them out of

Whatever the answer, we can be almost certain that by the end of September the moderates were already planning the purge. The events of Oct. 7 went so smoothly and so rapidly that the purge could not have been accomplished without many days of careful preparation. Just after midnight on Saturday, Oct. 9 less than 48 hours after the four radicals were arrested. Hua was identified by the New China news agency as the head of the central committee Politburo. It was also announced that he would directly super vise the collection and verification of all of Mao's writings and statements. As keeper of the scrolls he would be the final judge of what was authentic and what was

Since that announcement, there has not been a single reference to what was sup-posed to be Mao's last instruction, "act according to the principles laid down. The subsequent warnings about those who would tamper with Mao's writings make it obvious that the radicals will be charged with concocting that final quotation Posters hailing Hua as chairman of the Communist party started appearing in Peking about mid-day Saturday, just 12 hours after the first reference to him as head of the Politburo. The pattern of posters indicated that while the moderates had taken command, there was still besitation or confusion among certain grassroots units which were potential supporters of the radicals.

Only a few posters were put up by neighborhood units, for instance. Most of the posters hailing Hua were put up by army units and by factories, many of which have ties with the government's omic ministries which are considered firmly in the moderate camp.

The army obviously played a key role in the entire operation but details are hard to discern. Some analysts are firmly con-vinced that Hua allied himself closely with On Sept. 1, just eight days before Chairman Mao died. Hua put himself in the spotlight again by organizing a rally at the Great Hall of the People for thousands the Great Hall of the People for the Great Hall of the People for the Great Hall of the People for the Great Hall of the P the army as early as this spring and that the support he received in return was the

In spite of these circumstances, when a Winnipeg newspaper suggested that the annual report of Flyer Industries, the company in which Manitoba taxpayers have something in excess of $40 million invested, was "ever-so-secret," Mines Minister Sidney Green promptly dashed off a letter to the editor once more patting his own administration on the back for being so open about public information, and hinting that Manitoba needed no freedom of information act, legislation which, in

Mr. Green's words "facilitate the secrecy of a report, not its disclosure."

No Shangri-La

Before writing any more articles obviously designed to place the federal civil service in an unfavorable light I suggest Times Ottawa bureau columnist P Thomson gather more facts than were presented in his article published in the Victoria Times of October 4.

Civil servant pensions are not, paid from tax dollars as suggested by Mr. Thomson but to the contrary add significantly to the government coffers as shown below. An employee earning $16,000 per year ($7.70 per hour) is forced to pay $832 per year into the pension fund. Assuming an interest rate of 15 per cent (most conservative for such a lengthy term - let Mr. Thomson try any finance company) we find that after 35 years service the capital and compounded interest amount to $133,200, which is the earning interest at $19,980 per year. As the retired employee is entitled to only $11,200 per year pension this means the government is left with a surplus interest of $8,780 after paying out the pension. As the interest col-lected annually always exceeds the pension paid out this means, of course, the $133,200 is never touched and remains in the government's hands.

Another point overlooked by Mr. Thomson is that federal employees are paid much less than their counterparts in private industry. In Victoria, for example, a dockyard plumber or electrician is paid $7.50 per hour compared to $12 on construction sites. This difference amounts to ment of approximately j$328,000 over what it would cost if their employees were paid at the same rate as those on private construction sites.

Mr. Thomson apparently feels that one federal employee for every 40 of the population is too high a ratio. However, I wonder if he has considered the scope of the services offered by these federal employees which ranges from landing jumbo jets at fog shroudedair ports Air Canada) to disarming drug-crazed knife wielding hippies in our back streets (RCMP).

If after considering these points Mr. Thomson still feels the civil service is a bed of roses, it may just be that he will have a chance to partake of it, for in the wake of the recent prison riots, more guards will be hired to replace those who have quit in disgust. This should provide an excellent opportunity for Mr. Thomson to obtain a position as a federal employee and live in what he apparently believes is Shangri-La. — "No So Impressed."

As he suggested, it wasn't always this way. Three years ago the students were Thailand's undisputed heroes. They led a revolution through the streets of Bangkok that succeeded in toppling the three-man military dictatorship and opened the way to genuine parliamentary democracy for the first time in this ancient Bhuddist kingdom's

But the public's adulation of the students was short-lived. There were some specific in cidents. For instance, the students collected public contributions to help build a monument to the revolution's martyrs. The monument has yet to be built and the students were unable to account for much of the funds.

According to popular belief, some student organization leaders funded trips for themselves to Europe with the money. This rumor has been encouraged by groups of vocational school students who, more conserthemselves with far right-wing groups in

Because afternoon newspapers were allowed to appear on the street before an overall ban on publishing was imposed Wednesday night, the public has some idea of how vicious the attack was. What isn't known, though, is that the students were virtually without arms of their own and were lit-tle better off than fish in a barrel.

When the shooting subsided around noon, this correspondent and another journalist entered the accountancy faculty building, where the leftist students had been staging

For half an hour we searched the halls and classrooms, walking over shattered glass, blood-soaked clothing, scattered note books, and texts, toothbrushes and combs, cold, halfempty plates of food - all the signs of a student sit-in interrupted by unanticipated

In a number of hallways, desks and chairs were turned on their sides, for use as shields. Most were pierced by dozens of bullet holes. Aluminum and steel window frames were shattered and torn by heavy rounds, including recoilless rifle shells and rocket-launch grenades. Several heavy trails of blood led along the hallways and down the concrete

But one sign of a genuine gunfight was missing: there were no spent cartridges anywhere in the accountancy faculty building. What this clearly indicates is that the stu-dents inside the building had no weapons. They had nothing to protect themselves but desks and chairs.

My colleague and I could not get into the roof of the building. It was from there, police Gen. Narong Mahanond said in an interview, that his men were fired on "by machineguns and other heavy weapons." These arms, if they were there and were used, succeeded in killing only one of the several hundred assaulting policemen.

Now that the press is to be pre-censored by military authorities, there is little chance by military authorities, the grisly killings at Thamof the story of the grisly killings at Tham-masat being told here.

But that doesn't seem to matter much. The people of Thailand have learned that they're not yet ready to govern themselves, and there's little doubt left that they welcome the return to the security of military dic-

Special Law For Unions?

By DOUG COLLINS

VANCOUVER — It used to be said that there was one law of lowing this decision, the Crown poor. Is it now possible that there is one law for labor, and another for the rest of us?

That's not too took a very a courts are always right. But a

That's not too tough a question to ask when one considers the outcome of a trial which has seen the acquittal of Peter Burton, business agent for the Canadian Association of nelter and Allied Workers, on charges of having obstructed lawful use of the road leading to Alcan's West Coast smelter at Kitimat. Particularly not when Burton himself believes ferent laws than the com-

A little background: In June, the smelter workers mounted an illegal strike in an effort to re-open a contract with Alcan in which the union thought it had been "had." The union signed the contract in January, and did so in the belief that the Anti-Inflation Board guidelines would be rigidly applied to everyone. When their friends in the local pulp mill got more, and others across the land still more, they didn't like it. So 1,800 men walked off the job, and about 100 remained. This helped supervisory staff and personnel flown in from eastern Canada to keep the potlines going. But the people inside the plant had to stay there and be supplied by ship and helicopter, because from June 2 to June 12the strikers put up a barricade across the main road to the plant that prevented entry and exit. It came down only .200 policemen were sent in to by policeries were sent in to take-it down, and arrested 32 pickets in so doing — including Burton. Further, the police gave evidence that they had asked Burton to go to the union avoid a confrontation.' In spite of this, provincial court Judge Selwyn Romilly found there was no real evidence that Burton had obstructed the road "in any membership and ask them to remove the barricade "so as to

way, shape or form."

He said he was not satisfied that the Crown had proved beyond reasonable doubt that accused "did commit the charge," although he (the judge) had "a strong suspicion." But he also noted courts are always right. But a lot of questions are being asked, not least by the B.C. director of criminal prosecu-tions, Neil McDairmid. He says, for instance, that in any future incident of this kind, it might be necessary to have the cident in order to prove that an obstruction had occurred.

"There's nothing we can do except have an officer go in and possibly get hurt doing so," he said in commenting that the judge's decision was "very surprising." He is considering an appeal, and the Crown is reserving the right to re-open the remaining cases within the year permitted by law.

But the most significant comment came not from the Crown, or the judge, but from the accused. "I'm relieved and I think the judge's decision was correct," said Burton. "I think it has been implied in these proceedings that this was an industrial dispute and not the same as others.'

In other words, if a union decides it has a grievance, it is quite all right for it to set up an obstruction on private a public highway, in an attempt to get redress for its wrongs, real or imagined. And one can-not blame Burton and others for coming to that conclusion.

After all, the obstruction was there. We all saw it on televi-sion. We heard and saw pickets saying or implying that no one could pass. The company assumed that to be the case, and made no attempt to gain access to its plant by the usual route. But it seems no one is guilty

Perhaps we who saw the thing

It is not, you understand, that is simply curious. If, for instance, a company put up a barricade outside a union ofagree that it was different, it being nothing more than an industrial dispute? And if I got a decide to put up a barricade across my road so as to keep about it? I am not going to try, because I am sure they

Cheap Cement Water Jar Holds Hope for Africans

SOTIK, Kenya — More than 100 Kenyan farmers have just seen a demonstration here of what for rural Africal is a remarkable piece technology: the construction of a cement water jar that holds

80 gallons of water and costs only $1.20. Until this year's drought, most English families had only to turn a tap to get water in their homes. For millions of villagers in Africa and Asia, the water tap is a luxury beyond their reach, and they spend more time fetching The simple water jar could change their lives.

Originally invented in Thailand, the cement jar reached Sotik by way of the new Village Technology Centre set up by UNICEF in the plush Nairobi suburb of Karen. The centre and the jar are both off"appropriate technology," or

The brainchild of British economist Fritz Schumacher, AT represents an attempt to lessen the dependence of poor countries on Western technology. The farmers pressed forward to get a closer look at Joseph, second coat of cement on the grass-filled bag, which served as a mould for the jar. "How much is that one?" shouted one young man carried away by the general enthusiasm. "I'll buy #### statistics — President Ford appears to hold a slight lead in statistics. He is able to cite 17,273 statistics off the top of his head in 40 minutes. Whether he has any inside his head is uncertain. Carter can recite only 16,874 top-of-the-head statistics in the 40-minutes test span, but his defenders say this is because his Southern drawl slows his delivery. Both candidates wear Kelley's curtains. Broadly the Ford posi-tion is that no man with compassion would fire Kelley because of an all-too-human lapse over a few curtains. Carter has their statistics on the tops of their heads in obedience to security regulations prescribed by the Secret Service. Curtains — President Ford has refused to fire FBI Director Clarence Kelley for having household curtains installed with

Federal assistance. Carter says Kelley should have been fired, but qualifies the statement. Since Kelley's curtains are already up and President Ford hasn't fired him, Carter says, he doesn't know whether he will fire him or not if he, Carter, becomes president. The belief is that he will simply ask Kelley to take his curtains Lust and Religion - Carter claims to

At the half-way point in the Presidential campaign, here is the balance sheet on how the candidates stand:

Statistics - President Ford appears to have waged many struggles with lust and never to have lost a battle. Carter believes lust is a sin, but as a Baptist, he expects God to be forgiving if the sin is admitted and repented. He teaches in a Baptist Sunday School. Ford attends St. John's Episcopal Church. After "prayerful" consideration there on a typical Sunday morning, he returned to the White House and forgave Richard Nixon. He has still not-formulated his position on lust. Students of the Nixon pardon believe he will reluctantly agree to excuse it in inhibited lusters if persuaded that their inhibitions have made them suffer enough.

Compassion — No issue in the campaign has been harder fought than the vital com-passion issue. Ford charges that Carter countered strongly and subtly with an intricate series of moves to show that he, not President Ford, is the man who deserves the compassion vote. Thus, when Congress sent the president a $56 billion bill, for social services and the president vetoed it, Ford charged that the Democrats (Carter) were trying to trick him into looking uncompassionate. Carter emphasizes his personal claim to compassion by insisting that the unemployed are people. Ford counters this by pointing out that the employed, who far outnumber the un-employed, are also people.

The Halftime Summary

Presidentiality - The question of which man is more "Presidential" is believed by their advisors to be the most vital issue in the campaign. This is because both men, despite outward appearances, are running for president. President Ford, having spent most of his life in Congress, is strug-gling to overcome the impression that he is "Congressional". To demonstrate that he is "Presidential," he stays in the White House and has photographers take pic-tures of him looking possessively at the Rose Garden. Carter has fought back strongly to portray a highly Presidential smile than he used to.

detente — rresident rord is opposed to detente as a name for his foreign policy and wishes people would call it something else. While he supports his foreign policy, he also supports the Republic in platform which denounces his foreign policy as immoral. Carter supports Ford's foreign policy almost entirely, but does not agree policy almost entirely, but does not agree that it is immoral. He merely asserts that it is run by big spenders with no respect for fiscal integrity and says he can run it taken trips abroad at corporate expense, but says they were all right because, as governor of Georgia, he was only drumming up business for his state. President Ford admits that corporate lobbyists have entertained him on golf outings, but says they were all right because he hardly ever talked business. The delicate question here is not whether talking business is good or bad, but whether the voters wouldn't feel more comfortable with a candidate who took bowling weekends from lobbyists instead of golf outings and Apathy - All the polls show intense voter interest in apathy. For this reason, the fiercest struggle between Ford and Carter has been to determine which of them can come closest to total apathy. By working hard through the first half of the campaign to whittle his lead down to a mere 8 points in the Gallup Poll, Carter seems to have firm command of apathy at the moment. Ford, however, has so far been largely bottled up in the White House refusing to campaign. If he takes to the stump in these climactic weeks and shows himself to the nation, he could easily recoup all the apathy Carter has gained in the past month, and lose going away.

TAX SHELTERS NEEDED NOW

We are interested in negotiating with Builders, Developers or other Real Estate Firms on behalf of serious investors seeking 1976 tax shelters. Specifically we require apartment blocks in the Greater Victoria Area built under either the 1975 or 1976 CMHC Assisted Rental Programme. If under the 1976 programme, the apartments should be viable without the B.C. subsidiary loan. Suitable buildings may be under construction now but would preferably be at least 75% completed before Dec. 31, 1978.

BOISE, Idano (AP) — Morrison-Knudsen Co, Inc. of Boise, has announced a subsidiary has sold its 50-per-cent interest in Elk River coking coal properties in British Co-

The Idaho-based construction firm also has signed a $300 million contract to design and build mine facilities, of-vice-president, said Morrison-Knudsen has received about $3.5 million as full payment for properties held since 1969 by Emkay Canada Natural Resources Ltd., a subsidiary.

The sale, on a contingency basis, originally was an-nounced in June of 1975 pendthe Foreign Investment Review Act.

Alberta Blocks

Oil Flow EDMONTON (CP) - Premier Peter Lougheed moved this week to block the oil flow to a huge petrochemical projnia, Ont. The $250-million Petrosar Ltd. project has been guaranteed supplies by the federal government. Petrosar is a consortium headed by Polysar, whose entire Canadian operations have been located in eastern Canada.

Alberta wanted the petrochemical plant to be built within the province, not in Ontario, because it did not want an Ontario company develop-ing an Alberta resource.

"It's going to be tough," the premier told the legislature during his annual state-of-the-province address.

He said Petrosar has had a stranglehold over the domes-tic petrochemical industry, but added: "One thing sit chaser from the Alberta Pe-troleum Marketing Board and I would urge the business community to recognize the detriment of this step.'

And, though the event is open to all first and second-division teams on the Island—and any on the Mainland who feel like coming over—there really was little doubt of the outcome right from the start.

James Bay breezed through.

And just how quick they can do it was pretty obvious to about 400 fans who sat in glorious fall sunshine at Macdonald Park Sunday and watched the Bays run off with the Vancouver Island Rugby Union's Wenman Cup.

Because the teams are required to play several times in a day, all Wenman Cup matches were 20 minutes each half — only half the length of a usual rugby game.

On their way to the final, the Vikings defeated Saanich Velox 11-6 and Nanaimo 16-0 on Saturday, and Oak Bay Velox 19-3. Castaways had beaten Royal Roads 16-0 on Saturday but rather surprisingly were soundly beaten 18-0 by James Bay's seconddivision side before going on to beat Agrarians 16-3 to reach the consolation final.

The consolation playoff was won by Rowing Club I of Vanamino 4-0 in the final. The Rowers had a 14-3 win over cach they had reached their opponents' line and their captain Johnston, had dived over for the first try even before the first minute had ticked by.

Standoff-half Kym Clarke added the convert and the Bays carried on from there. Chuck Shergold, Casey Walt and Tom Lippa added three over the half and victory over James Bay Secondary and the conversion. victory over James Bay Sec-

The Bays didn't weit long before showing the fans they meant to make use of every second in their mini final added two more converts to outscore Vikings 24-0 in the final half.

So Fred Stanley, New York's shortstop, dug one for him and Cincinnati's Tony Perez buried him.

The result was a 4-3 Cincinnati victory in the second game of the World Series on a chilly Sunday night, giving the Reds a 2-0 advantage in the best-of-seven series, which shifts to Yankee Stadium on Tuesday night.

On Saturday, Perez had three hits to help the Reds down the Yankees 5-1 in the Series opener behind the pitching of Don Gullett, whose season ended in the eighth in-ning when he dislocated a tendon in his right ankle.

On Saturday, Dave Concepcion tripled in the third inning and scored on Pete Rose's sacrifice fly to break a 1-1 tie. Perez singled in the Reds' third run in the sixth and Cin-cinnati clinched the win with two in the seventh when Johnny Bench delivered a run-scoring triple, then scored

POLICE HUNT PIPE BOMBERS

Victoria city police today were still seeking culprits responsible for exploding three homemade pipe bombs in James Bay Saturday.

No one was injured and there was no serious property damage when the 10-inch copper pipes filled with gun-powder were exploded, but police received "quite a rash of calls" from nearby residents.

Explosions were heard between 8 p.m. and 10:30 p.m. in the Macdonald Park and Oswego Street areas. Police described the bomb recovered near Macdonald Park as "one of the usual pipe bombs that kids make up."

There will be no flu vaccine available in the Capital Re-gional District until early next

That was the word today from Dr. Allan Arnell, regional health officer, who said he has been getting abusive telephone calls from people claiming he is storing the vaccine.

He said people are likely confused by reports that any vaccine which treats only the so-called swine flu will be stored until there are more cases of the flu reported.

Arneil said there is current ly no vaccine of either type once the type which treats both flu strains arrives, it will be distributed through the munity health services

There were reports last month that the vaccine would be available in the area by mid-October but due to delays in Toronto, where the vaccine is being tested and bottled, it will likely not be here until the first week of November at the earliest.

They both think it is impor-tant that "work should begin immediately by individual trade unions and umbrella organizations . . . to educate immigrant women workers on their rights as employees.

It was suggested to them (by immigrant women themselves) this could best be done through translated materials-leaflets, pamphlets, and Bills of Rights, containing basic information such as atheirons, ware entitlement. minimum wage, entitlement to holiday pay, rest periods and so on.

Also by the employment of union organizers and officials who have extensive contacts in the immigrant community and who are immigrants

The two researchers found that immigrant women often lead lives of great stress and ing world and must rapidly adopt Canadian customs and learn English in order to survive," Lorraine pointed out.

"Children quickly adapt through relations with other children. Women however, often do not change in such ways and the distance be-tween them and their families is increased."

This isolation could be overcome they point out: By re-cruitment of more female ethnic social workers and multi-lingual Manpower counsellors in all government agencies backgrounds; the provision of orientation counselling pro-grams for new Canadian women, including visits to stores, schools and banks; floating community workers attached to Manpower Centres, who can help new people work through their ini-tial problems on landing and establishment and funding of an on-going support group for immigrant women.

In connection with education both Lorraine and There-sa agree that language is the key both in preserving ethnic identity and ending the isolation of immigrant women.

"If they can speak English one large obstacle has been removed," Theresa says.

Therefore, there is need for more appropriate English as a Second Language programs in Victoria.

But there is need for es-tablishment of neighborhood English language programs in local schools with baby-sitting service similar to the Mums and Tots program in Vancouver, sponsored jointly by federal and provincial government, the immigrant Services over there.

The brief says that "dealing with big government and big business" can be a humiliating and frightening experience and one in which the immigrant women (especially those from rural backgrounds) usually lose.

Third Most Useful: a Sabre Saw

After you buy an electric drill and a portable circular saw, the next most useful power tool you can own is a sabre saw.

Of course the sabre saw (or portable jigsaw) is designed primarily for cutting curves. And it does the job well. But with the right blade it can also do a good job of making straight cuts. With an extralong blade it can saw through 4x4 stock in one pass, something a circular saw can't do. That same blade can cut branches and small logs. Another blade will cut steel plate, or pipe. And a knifeedge blade will easily cut rubber, cork, wallboard and

So it's no wonder the sabre saw is the third most useful portable power tool.

Features to look for:

Prices for sabre saws start at around $15 and go as high as $80 or more. For the low price you'll get a light-duty, single-speed tool with a fairly short blade stroke. This is all right if you plan mostly light cuts in wood or other relatively soft materials. But if you want a tool that will do all the jobs mentioned above, you'll have to pay more.

After East had preempted with a three-spade call, South showed the freakish, powerful, distributional nature of his hand by leaping to six clubs. East, feeling that contract would be fulfilled, now made the sacrificial bid of six spades.

After ruffing West's opening spade lead, declarer led the nine of trumps to dummy,'s ace. He was most unhappy when East failed to follow suit, for West now had four trumps remaining, while declarer had but three. The queen of hearts was then led, with the finesse being taken. When it succeeded, the first hurdle had been overcome.

Next came a diamond to South's ace, after which the diamond king was cashed. Now the diamond queen was led, and West's goose was cooked. If he ruffed, dummy would overruff with the eight-spot. West's trumps would then be picked up, and the rest of the tricks would belong to declarer.

When declarer then led his ace of hearts (to trick ten), West, with nothing but four trumps remaining in his hand, had no choice but to trump. # Call Them Hydroponic Hyacinths

Hyacinths can still be started growing in water with the expectancy of flowering to commence in about 12 weeks

As with all successful bulb growing, indoors or out, a mass of roots must be developed before a sturdy flower spike can be expected. An exception to this statement is the Colchium which puts up flowers before rooting; but it produces no stem, only the flower on its flower tube.

Two kinds of hyacinth can be tried, the regular single large flowered, or the smaller Roman hyacinth with many stems. Both have the strongly characteristic perfume.

Growing in water is probably the easiest method for people without a garden. While hyacinth glasses or jars are sometimes seen for sale,

About a quart size gives ample space for a large root

The hyacinth bulb should rest in the opening with its base just clear of water. The roots will soon start growing downwards towards the moisture until the jar is filled with roots. Not until this happens do we want much top growth.

Here is the method.

In the bottom of the glass in the control of the glass is reasonable to the method of the glass in the control of the glass is reasonable to the control of the glass is the control of the glass is reasonable to the control of the glass is the glass is the control of the glass is the control of the glass is the jar, put about an inch of washed (clean) stones, mixed with pieces of charcoal (pea size, charred wood). The stones give weight to the jar preventing spilling when top growth begins; the charcoal prevents mustiness of standing water. Fill the jar to about the neck with water between 5 and 10 degs. C., bare-

If the bulb is too small for the opening, use a piece of nylon net or coarse cheese-cloth anchored around the jar top and slightly dipping down-wards. Set the bul in this so that the base is above water. The nylon net bags we buy nuts in seem perfect.

The next need is for a completely dark place for rooting. If several hyacinths, each in its own jar, are being grown, a cardboard cartion can be used. Poke some holes in the sides to let in air, and close the top four lid sections to keep out light yet still admit a little air. Put the carton in a dark corner of garage (or shaded corner of balcony or sundeck) loosely covered with several newspaper sections to keep light out of the airholes, This is a bit tricky. Set the carton on wood blocks not on the floor. Air circulation is need-

Check weekly to add tepid water tot the jar as needed, pouring it in at the side of the side without disturbing the roots.

In about 12 weeks, those with a jarful of roots can be moved to a warmer place at about 13 to 16 deg. C. At the same time fashion a paper cone about six inches deep to one about six inches deep to fit over the neck of the jar. This encourages the top growth. When it reaches about five inches, remove the paper cone and place the jar in daylight (not sun) until the

From then until the flowers begin opening, keep in sunny window, turning daily for even, straight growth.

All bulb flowers last longer once they open if they are in a cool, light place. Those indoors need a cool window where the light is good but they should never be in direct sun. And don't forget the top-ping up with tepid water as long as flowers last.

Classic. Fashionable. Functional. Some of the reasons why London Fog is our best selling raincoat. Stain and water repellent, too. But most of all, it's because of its price. Quite affordable when you consider the years of wear you'll be getting. London Fog raincoat, sizes 36-46, has zip in-or-out lining. 95.00

Flu Shots Program Set

By MIKE HUGHES Times Staff

There will be no flu vaccine available in the Capital Regional District until early next month.

That was the word today from Dr. Allan Arnell, regional health officer, who said he has been getting abusive telephone calls from people claiming he is storing the vac-

He said people are likely confused by reports that any vaccine which treats only the so-called swine flu will be stored until there are more cases of the flu reported.

But the variety the district is waiting for would protect against both the swine flu and the A-Victoria strain, which was prevalent last Arneil said there is current vaccine of either type once the type which treats both flu strains arrives, it will be distributed through the ommunity health services.

There'. were reports last month that the vaccine would be available in the area by mid-October but due to delays in Toronto, where the vaccine is being tested and bottled, it will likely not be here until the first week of November at the earliest.

Second priority for the vaccine will go to those 6 and over who do not have a chronic disease but who are living
